

The insertion time and search time for an ordered binary tree is $O(\log(N))$. The insertion time for an unordered tree should be much quicker. Since there is no order you can insert the new node wherever you desire. Rather than being beholden to a specific place. However the search time should be much slower. You would need to touch all nodes.

